Bias causes study results to differ systematically from the truth. Examples of poorly reported items were not included due to space considerations and the consensus that their inclusion would not substantially increase understanding or adoption of the guidelines.

Refined, sleek and considered, the Victoria-based studio is at the forefront. Declarations of transparency do not address any potential bias within the study. For example, estimates of the rate of the event of interest or other assumptions central to calculations are commonly imprecise, if not guesswork. Often additional analyses are needed, either instead of, or as well as those of data-Sources and validation.
