Normally it is employed as a unit under battalion control because of the complementary nature of the platoon elements. Air cavalry units are ideally suited to act as a screening force in movement to contact. The squadron and its troops may be employed in support of waterborne elements or elements moving overland.

Water routes have strategic and tactical importance to an insurgent or enemy. Plans include designation of counterambush maneuver elements, command and control measures, fire support, all-round security, identification and recognition of committed elements, and recovery and reorganization of the committed force. RAS boats provide supporting fires for the maneuvering elements to the flank's front and rear until the fires are masked by the terrain or advancing troops.

The school provides quality basic airborner refresher and jumpmaster refresher and watercraft are substitutes for wheeled and tracked vehicles in meeting armor, armament, and transport requirements.
